Barbara C. Alfaro, an associate in the firm's Hollywood office, focuses her practice in all general liability matters. Following law school, Barbara began her legal career at a private Miami firm, representing plaintiffs in first-party property cases. She then moved on to a prominent insurance defense firm, where she defended insurance carriers against homeowners' claims in first-party property disputes. Throughout her career and diverse roles, Barbara has gained significant experience in litigation.

She earned a Master's in Business Administration from Nova Southeastern University and a Master's in Organizational Psychology from Keiser University. While attending law school at Barry University School of Law, Barbara worked as a legal assistant for a family and condominium law practice, wherein she gained experience in complex matters in both areas.
